SWC to Aid Athletes, One Penalized

Dallas, Tex., May 14.—(AP)—When the Southwest Conference penalized a member for excessive entertainment of an athlete, an incident destined to be known as the "hot dog trip" was a reflection on the member, conference Secretary Howard Grubbs said today.

The faculty committee of the conference, meeting over the weekend, handed down a ruling that would cut two years off the participation of Robert Easley, Houston high school football star, if he chose to go to Baylor.

The fullback's trip to Dallas last summer with a Baylor alumnus to see a professional football game caused the conference to publicly assess its first penalty under the lavish entertainment rule.

Easley was informed that he would lose his freshman year and have only two varsity years of participation if he went to Baylor. Baylor knew nothing about it, Grubbs declared, and in my judgment Easley didn't know he was violating any rule and neither did the alumnus. But the rule was violated and action had to be taken.

Thus, the penalty was levied publicly as a example as the conference moved toward bringing all persons into rule compliance in athletic recruiting and scholarship.

The committee did not reveal who the alumnus was, but it is Houston State (Red) gwall, member of the

The FORM DIVINE by HILDEGARDE DOLSON

LUCILLA WEBB, age 37, started out that April morning to have lunch with an ex-schoolmate she hadn't seen in 17 years. However, for a woman who knew where she was going and had exactly enough time to get there, she managed to stall quite a lot.

At the northwest corner of Tenth Street, a block from the Fifth Avenue bus stop, she paused before the Church of the Ascension to read the Thought for Today: Happiness Must Be Watered Like a Plant.

Lucy she was too restless, or too wary, to ask herself, "Do I Water Happiness Like a Plant?" Instead she read the other notices. Just below this on the grass, was a brand-new sign No Dogs. They might as well add "And No Children," she thought, measuring by eye the space between the iron bars of the fence surrounding the church. Sniffles, their spangle, could easily wriggle through, and for that matter, so could Hope.

Hoopy—was a, but children's bodies were as pliable as rubber, squeezing eagerly into any shape that seemed expedient.

"I'll be late meeting Charlotte," she told herself, and sauntered across to the bus stop. She kept glancing at her wrist watch till the bus appeared. When she got on, the driver shut the doors so fast they almost spanked her behind, and goaded the bus into a bucking-bronco technique that tossed Lucilla into the first vacant seat.

She glanced in the little paneled mirror to reassure herself that her hair was still on straight. Arthur had always liked this hair. She reflected bitterly that when her husband once liked something, he never outgrew it.

Lucilla thought of Arthur as he had looked that morning half-dressed, when he called to her, "Mommy, where are my other nylon shorts?" Originally it had pleased and touched her, to have Arthur imitating Hoopy, calling her Mommy, but now she saw it as a depressing, callous indication of Arthur's feelings toward her: simply a motherly woman who knew where his shorts were. Who was he to call her Mommy? He was three years older, and his stomach was sagging like a kangaroo pouch.

A BLOCK beyond Best's she laid aside the case against Arthur, she could pick up later without losing a stitch, and gave herself a last-minute dusting and straightening before getting off the bus. She was pleased to remember that Charlotte had never been smart-looking. As a girl she had been plump and shiny. By now she must be huge.

There may have been the barest connection between this idea and the next: It will be nice to see Charlotte again (and let her see me). It resulted from being optimistic, inclined to think pleasant thoughts, especially about herself.

She was a small-boned woman, five inches over five feet, but what had been slenderness would now be more fairly called scrawny.

She now halted before the Woman's Exchange. Lucilla entered the hallway, bounded by dark old banistered stairs on the left, and on the right an archway opening into the restaurant. She went upstairs and reached her room for Charlotte.

She passed a mad-mouthed woman dressed entirely in black, even to her stockings, and the woman became in Lucilla's mind a brave widow who supported three children by selling cakes through the Woman's Exchange. Then Lucilla reached her room.

LUCILLA went on making pleased noises as they sat down at the table. Charlotte drank half a glass of water in one healthy gulp, and opened a menu. She put on bifocals. "I notice you've come to wearing your specs all the time," she said. "Well, we're all in the same boat."

Lucilla had a furious impulse to snatch off her glasses and stand up. "The sweet potato and chicken with walnuts sounds good," Charlotte went on, unaware of the rocking resentment. The waitress, starched and neat as a parlormaid, stood beside their table. "Two chicken and nut casserole?"

Lucilla's normally small, rather childlike voice was fogged with rebellion as she said, "No, I'll take the avocado salad."

"Mercy, no wonder you're so skinny," Charlotte said.

The waitress brought their plates and Charlotte's fork went with a derrick's regular up and down from her plate to her mouth, telling about what Ed had said. "He's in Light and Gas," Charlotte said, conjuring up a picture of Ed's head rising out of a bucket. "But you haven't even told me what your husband does."

"He's in the ethical drug business," Lucilla had long ago decided that to most outsiders this sounded as if one were saying, "My husband is a pharmacist."

He doesn't smuggle drugs—he's ETHICAL. "Barrett Drugs is really owned by the Rub-dub Cheat-Rub Corporation," she added, waiting for Charlotte to exclaim, as people did, "Oh, Rub-dub! Of course!"

"Heaven," Charlotte went on. "I almost forgot to tell you the weirdest thing of all. You remember Dorothy's cousin Charlie, the one we didn't want to rush, and Dorothy was so relieved when she went Alphas?"

The name, to Lucilla, carried only a sense of homeliness, but she nodded.

"Well, when Ed and I were back at Jasper for a reunion last year, who should we see but Dorothy with this absolutely glamorous brunette. And you'd never guess who the girl was, Charlie?"

THE image that had evaded her came back. Charlie was the sallow girl with spots, who scuttled sideways like a crab. "But she's our age."

"I know. That's what I said to Dorothy. I said, 'What on earth did Charlie do to herself?' Well, I nearly died when she told me. Charlie came to New York and went to the beautiful You School—you know, the one you see ads for in the magazines, the Before and After."

"But they couldn't have changed her that much." The skepticism was overlaid with hope, as when a child says, "But how could the crab turn into a princess?"

"They did," Dorothy told me. Charlie went to the beautiful You School every day, all day long, for two months. Would you be willing to go through all that rigmarole and pay a lot of good money just to help your looks?"

Lucilla said virtuously that of course she wouldn't. On top of that, she was surprised to hear her voice saying, "How much does it cost?"

Charlotte shrugged. "Plenty, I'll bet."

Lucilla returned to her fantasy. And now the whimsically cheek-boned man was saying, "You're so incredibly young and lovely. You must have been 18 when Hoopy was born." And Lucilla gave him a glamorous, animalistic smile.
